

Lynn Perry Wooten, Ph.D.

David J. Nolan Dean and Professor of Management and Organizations
Dyson School of Applied Economics and Management
Cornell University

Lynn Perry Wooten is Dean and Professor of Management and Organizations for Cornell University's Dyson School. Prior to joining Cornell, she was on the faculty at the University of Michigan's Ross School of Business for almost two decades.

Lynn's current research bridges theory and practice and focuses on positive organizing routines, diversity management practices, and crisis leadership. Her research has been published in notable journals and she is the co-author of Leading Under Pressure: From Surviving to Thriving Before, During, and After a Crisis.

Lynn is an alumna of the University of Michigan (PhD). She received her BS from North Carolina A&T State University and her MBA from the Fuqua School of Business at Duke University.